

Gen. Schaefer Named 29th Infantry Brigade Commander

By WALLACE MITCHELL
Advertiser Military Writer
Brig. Gen. Frederick A. Schaefer III yesterday was named to lead the National Guard's 29th Infantry Brigade into active duty. The move was made apparently to keep the command in the Guard.

The command calls for a brigadier general. Schaefer is the only such one-star general in the Hawaii Army National Guard available to replace the retiring commander, Brig. Gen. Francis S. Takemoto.

Although there are four senior colonels available for the command, the one chosen would have to depend on the Army for the necessary promotion to brigadier general.

It was felt that the Army might prefer to assign one of its current brigadier generals to the post.

Schaefer volunteered for the command, stepping out as commanding general of the Hawaii Army National Guard of which the Brigade is but a part, although a major one.

"I don't consider it a step down," Schaefer said in a press conference at his Ft. Ruger office. "The post calls for the same grade and complements.

"I did volunteer. It was my choice and I am very happy to be accepted."

"I'm extremely pleased to be given the opportunity to take command and go on active duty with the Brigade. It has trained for a long time and you can be sure it will be doing a good job and setting an example for other units."

Schaefer commanded the Brigade before taking command of all Army Guard units in February, 1960. He has followed it closely in its training, particularly in its accelerated training program the past two years as one of the Army's elite Selected Reserve Forces.

"I'm as close to it as I could possibly be—I know its men and its problems," Schaefer said.

"Training-wise, it's in

"General Schaefer is a

YOSHIMASU

SCHAEFER

Guard's 29th Infantry Brigade into active duty. The move was made apparently to keep the command in the Guard. Col. Edward M. Yoshimatsu, chief of staff, has been named acting commander of the Hawaii Army National Guard.

He was wounded in January, 1943, while leading his platoon in an assault on an enemy position. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross and Bronze Star for gallantry.

He is vice president and a fourth generation Hawaiian, a graduate of Punahoa School and Cornell University. Commissioned a second lieutenant upon graduation from Cornell in 1942, he saw action at Guadalcanal with the 25th Infantry Division. After two months in action highly qualified officer who should bring credit to the 1st Battalion in leading them during their period of active duty.

Schaefer, 47, is a fourth generation Hawaiian, a graduate of Punahoa School and Cornell University. Commissioned a second lieutenant upon graduation from Cornell in 1942, he saw action at Guadalcanal with the 25th Infantry Division. After two months in action

Schaefer will take command of the Brigade May 4, when Takemoto's retirement is effective. Takemoto, 55, was forced by Army regulations to retire because of time in service and grade.

Maj. Gen. Benjamin J. Webster, State Adjutant General who appointed Schaefer, was unable to be at the press conference. He was at Tripler Hospital undergoing his annual physical examination.

He issued the following statement, however: "I am extremely pleased that General Schaefer has volunteered to take command of the 29th Infantry Brigade."

"Training-wise, it's in

"General Schaefer is a

Many enlisted Guardsmen didn't want to comment on Schaefer's selection. They said they didn't know anything about him.

Sp4 Bryan Anzai, with

Delta Company of the 29th

Support Battalion, said,

"Takemoto was a good brigade commander. I'm sure

Gen. Schaefer will do just as well if not better."

PFC. Robert Phillips of 1065 Keolu Drive, said "Let's hope Schaefer is as good as Takemoto. We're being activated and we will need the best leadership possible."

Phillips is a scout observer with the 29th Brigade's Support Battalion.

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was also considered to fill the slot of commander of the 29th Infantry.

"Schaef

er did not want to go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Another officer who was rooting for one of the Guard colonels to fill the slot, said he was terribly disappointed in Schaefer's selection.

"Schaef

er did not want to

go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was also considered to fill the slot of commander of the 29th Infantry.

"Schaef

er did not want to

go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Another officer who was rooting for one of the Guard colonels to fill the slot, said he was terribly disappointed in Schaefer's selection.

"Schaef

er did not want to

go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was also considered to fill the slot of commander of the 29th Infantry.

"Schaef

er did not want to

go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was also considered to fill the slot of commander of the 29th Infantry.

"Schaef

er did not want to go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was also considered to fill the slot of commander of the 29th Infantry.

"Schaef

er did not want to go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was also considered to fill the slot of commander of the 29th Infantry.

"Schaef

er did not want to go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was also considered to fill the slot of commander of the 29th Infantry.

"Schaef

er did not want to go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was also considered to fill the slot of commander of the 29th Infantry.

"Schaef

er did not want to go with the unit in the first

place," he said. "The whole

thing is very political."

Col. Clyde Woods, deputy

for years."

Many enlisted Guardsmen who was considered by many to be the logical person to fill the job, said he was happy about Schaefer's selection. "It's probably the best thing that could happen," Woods said. "Schaefer is almost as familiar with the men that make up the Brigade as Takemoto was."

Col. John Becker, com-

mander of Nike-Hercules

298th Artillery Group, was