29th Brigade
now training
as battalion

The 29th Brigade has moved up to battalion level combat training at Schofield Barracks.

Meanwhile, at Pohakuloa on Hawaii, men of Troop E are driving nine M-551 Sheridan tanks around that rugged training area.

This week artillery units of the 29th will head for Pohakuloa to start firing practice.

Infantry units at Schofield "are practicing Italian-type combat training, in which they move in to make contact with the enemy," a spokesman said.

Most of this training is done in the Kahuku area.

The brigade had been working at the company level up until now.

The army chief of staff, Gen. William C. Westmoreland, may visit the brigade Thursday, but it is not definite, Army officials report.
